

JOHN PALMER

John Palmer is a Member of the Governing Board of The European Policy Centre. He is also deputy chairman of the EPC “Political Europe” programme. Between 1997 and 2005 he was the Political Director of the Centre. For more than 20 years, until 1997, he was the Brussels based European Editor of The Guardian. During his time as EPC Political Director, John Palmer was also Editor-in-Chief of The EPC’s on-line, European public policy journal - Challenge Europe. He is an experienced radio and television broadcaster in both English and French. From 1983 to 1986, John Palmer was a Director of the Greater London Enterprise Board – a public sector regional economic development agency. During this time he also served as a Board Member of London Transport.

John Palmer is the author of three books on European affairs:

Europe Without America – the crisis in Atlantic relations

(Oxford University Press 1987)

Trading Places – the future of the European Community

(Hutchinson’s, London 1989)

1992 and beyond – the European Community into the 21st Century

(The European Commission, Brussels 1991)

John Palmer was educated at Wimbledon College and the London School of Economics.

John Palmer is regarded as a leading authority in analysis of economic and macro-political trends in the European Union and in the development of EU common foreign, security and defence policy. He regularly gives high-level briefings to business leaders, diplomats, trade unions, NGOs and regional authorities on important developments in European Union affairs.